> NEVER TOO FULL. An Executent Way to Keep the Water Tank from Overflowing.

An excellent way to control the water in a tank is the one in common use and robably not patented. A weight is attached to the faucet of the tank which is just sufficient to close it and keep it losed. A strong cord passes upward over small pulley, then herizontally and down directly over the center of the tank, and is then attached to a float. When water is taken from the trough of course the surface falls, iowering the oat. This pulls on the cord, which ifts and opens the valve, allowing water to flow into the tank. When the tank has filled sufficiently the float is raised, the cork slack-ened and the fancet closed. The accompanying illustration will convey

CORN SMUT.

Some Suggestions for the General Treatment of the Affected Grain. Corn smut is widely distributed throughout our country, and the injury resulting from its attack varies from ess than one per cent to more than Vir hal run about fifty miles with a half of the crop. Experimenters do not agree in their opinions as to its harmcertain that it is not an active poison. The black powder of the smut consists of the spores, which are simple, seedlike reproductive bodies. These reproduce smut much as seeds reproduce ordinary plants. Smut spores may grow n manure and liquids in the harnyard for an indefinite period. Tho smut enters the corn when it is very oung, penetrating the soft tissues of tho lowest joint and root of the small plant. Smut does not pass from plant to plant in the corn-field.

Outward applications to affected plants will do no good, for the fungus is inside, and no application will reach it. Great care should be taken to keep the ground from becoming filled with spores. By a rotation of crops the increase of smut may be provented. Donestie animals should not be allowed to eat the smut in the field, for they will distribute the spores in their dropnings. Care should be taken not to conaminate yard manure with the spores. infected stalks should be removed from tho field before the smut balls open and then be carefully destroyed. Plant none but seed which is perfectly free from smnt spores. The spores adhering to seed-corn may be killed by immersion in a strong solution of blue vitriel. In a general way the proper the order his otherwise pleasant face tion may be given as fellows; viz.: Uso clouded, and in a short, sharp tone he as many pounds of blue vitriol as gallons of water. One thing further has been fully settled and that Is that corn ground, coh and ail, makes a better feed for cattle than when the graln aiono is ground. This has been the subject of careful experiment at more than one of the experiment stations, where every thing was done with the utmost care, the food being weighed out daily and the stock weighed at stated periods, and the conclusion reached was that a pound of cob and corn was worth as much as a pound of corn aione. The value of the coh seems to como from the balancing of the ration rather him over the rails la the dark yard on than from the value of the food constituents ln it, as a chemical analysis of the eoh shows it to be a little more vaiuable than the corn fedder.
